The diagrams show a sequence of four stages of bone healing. Each stage is represented by a horizontal bone segment within a dashed triangular frame. In the first stage, the bone is red and has a thick, dark red fracture line across its center. In the second stage, the bone is grey and the fracture line is thinner and lighter. In the third stage, the bone is grey and the fracture line is very thin. In the fourth stage, the bone is grey and the fracture line is almost invisible, indicating a nearly healed bone.
